PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 19—

Kim McQuilken, Lehigh University's pro quarterback prospect, put on an aerial show tonight in Franklin Field, but the senior from Allentown, Pa., was overshadowed by Penn's junior passer, Marty Vaughn.

Vaughn threw a pair of touchdown passes to his all-Ivy League split end, Don Clune, that carried the Quakers to a 27-20 victory. It was the second night game here in Penn's football history, which began in 1876, and the victory was the Quakers' 34th in succession over the Engineers. But the triumph did not come until the final minute.

Penn's winning touchdown was a Vaughn-to-Clune pass that covered 6 yards, capping an 84-yard drive in six plays. Vaughn also hit Clune with a 37-yard toss to start the drive from Penn's 16-yard line.

Then Adolph Bellizeare raced 36 yards off tackle to the Lehigh 11. Another pass to Clune was incomplete, but Lehigh was guilty of pass interference, putting the ball on the 1-yard line. Bellizeare failed to go over, but Lehigh was offside, putting the ball a half-yard out.

This time the Quakers were set back 5 yards for having an illegal receiver downfield on another Vaughn pass attempt. Finally, with third down and 21 yards to score, Vaughn hit Bob Bucola, his flanker back, for 15 yards. Then Clune reached between two Lehigh defenders on an over-the-middle pass to score with 40 seconds to play.

The non-Ivy League game gave Penn a 3-1 won-lost record while Lehigh suffered its third defeat against three victories and a tie with Cornell. Lehigh has won only twice in the series, in 1886 and 1889.

Just before Penn's final touchdown, Lehigh moved from its 8 after stopping the Quakers at the 3.

The Engineers got to the Penn 1-yard line, where they had a fourth down. On a quarterback sneak, McQuilken appeared to have the touchdown that would have given Lehigh a 23-20 lead. But the Engineers were penalized 5 yards for illegal procedure, setting them back to the 6.

Dave Mancosh then booted his second field goal, a 22-yard effort that tied the score at 20-20. His earlier kick of 29 yards had given Lehigh a 10-7 lead at half-time.

Vaughn wound up with 245 yards on 13 of 21 completed passes. McQuilken hit for 256 yards with 23 of 38. Clune got the better of his catching duel with Lehigh's

Bill Schlegel, grabbing five passes for 112 yards and a pair of touchdowns. Schlegel finished with 75 yards on five receptions. Vaughn also hit Buoola with four passes for 98 yards.

Lehigh's multiple-T offense also produced 180 yards on the ground. Much of that was the work of Bob Stewart and Rod Gardner, a burly, 195-pound freshman from Seton Hall Prep.

Gardner picked up 84 yards on 19 carries. Stewart gained 66 yards on the same number of rushes.

But Bellizeare, the Penn running back who leads the Ivy League in rushing and scoring, slashed and darted his way for 109 yards on 16 attempts. Vaughn added 63 on 12 rushes.

Lehigh's offense generated 26 first downs to Penn's 17, but Vaughn's passing, coupled with Penn's sturdy defense in the closing minute was just enough to earn the victory in a game that was not settled until Ken Bald, Penn's left cornerback, intercepted McQuilken's last-ditch pass on the Penn 1.
