

Knicks Rout Cavaliers, 103 to 87

By THOMAS ROGERS

In a wild game which saw the Knicks play at their absolute best and then their near worst, Walt Frazier passed the 10,000-point mark in his seven-season National Basketball Association career last night during a 103-87 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers before a capacity crowd of 19,694 at Madison Square Garden.

Frazier, who scored 21 points, high in the game, needed only 12 to reach the 10,000-point plateau. In the first minute of the second quarter, he hit on a jump shot from the right side for his 13th point of the game, one over his target. John Condon, the public address system announcer, stopped the game to tell the crowd and Frazier waved happily.

That was part of the happiness for Frazier and the Knicks who ran roughshod over the Cavaliers in the first half. The Cavaliers missed their first 10 shots and 34 of 47 in the first half. They left the floor at intermission trailing by 32 points, 60-28.

"It was just one of those nights," said Frazier. "Everything we did on offense was right while the Cavaliers couldn't buy a basket."

Half-Time Talk

"At half-time, I told my guys that they seemed to have lost their poise and their confidence," said Coach Bill Fitch of Cleveland. "I told them I hoped they hadn't lost their pride, too."

The Cavs were a far different team in the second half, especially after they had fallen behind by 37 points, 75-38, with eight minutes left in the third quarter.

Then they started to play disciplined basketball and began a long comeback. A 12-point run early in the fourth quarter chopped the New York advantage to 21 points. Then, with only eight minutes left in the game, the Cavs were down by only 18, 85-67.

To nail down the decision, Coach Red Holzman of the Knicks had to return Frazier and Dave DeBusschere, who had seemingly left the game for good in the third quarter.

"I really didn't want to go back and neither did Clyde," said DeBusschere. "Clyde had already taken off his sneakers. But you can't let a 37-point lead slip to 18 without doing something."

"The 'red' team is famous for losing leads," said Frazier, speaking of the New York substitutes. "It's hard to blow a 37-point lead, but they were trying."

The return of Frazier and DeBusschere stabilized the Knicks enough for them to cruise to their 11th straight victory over the Cavs at the Garden.

The Cavs seemed helpless on offense in the first half, hitting only 13 of 47 shots from the floor. Meanwhile, the Knicks were moving the ball well, getting good shots and making them. They hit 27 of 47 — 14 more field goals than the Cavs made on the same amount of attempts.

"I never expected to do this," said Frazier in the dressing room after receiving the game ball as a memento of reaching the 10,000-point mark. "When I came into the league, I considered myself strictly a defensive man and a passer. The fact that Willis Reed has been hurt so much has been responsible for

Asked when he expected to reach the 20,000-point level, he said: "Well, another seven years I guess. Maybe it'll only take five considering our tissue-paper guards who get hurt all the time. I'll have to play all the time and the points will just come."

Frazier was referring to Earl Monroe, Dean Meminger and Henry Bibby—all of whom have been sidelined with injuries this season. Meminger hurt himself again last night.

He pulled a hamstring muscle in his right leg and had to sit out the second half, but expects to be ready for the next game, Tuesday night against Phoenix at the Garden.

It was the Knicks' 19th triumph in 20 meetings with the 4-year-old Cavaliers, the only N.B.A. team that has not won at the Garden.

Cleveland has lost all 11 games here since entering the league and 11 in a row over all to the Knicks since their only victory two years ago.

"We must have them psyched here," said Frazier. "We never have any problems with them here, but it's always a struggle with them in Cleveland."
